Gesellschaft Deutscher Chemiker

The Gesellschaft Deutscher Chemiker (GDCh) is the largest chemical society in continental Europe with members from academe, industry and other areas. The GDCh supports chemistry in teaching, research and application and promotes the understanding of chemistry in the public.

The Career Service of the GDCh supports employers in filling their openings in the field of chemistry. The Career Service creates contacts between job seekers and providers and mediates the placement of chemists and scientists in related areas for all work areas dealing with chemistry. In addition, the GDCh Career Service organizes special events such as job markets at important trade fairs or conferences and workshops for job seekers.

The Network brings together national groupings of young chemists within the EuCheMS framework to discuss issues of common interest and new initiatives. It promotes interaction among chemists in European industry, academia, professional institutions and European government bodies.

Through networking, young chemists contribute to the development of European initiatives, including scientific programs in chemistry and molecular sciences as well as other scientific and technological areas, for example nanoscience, life science, environmental science, electronics.
